

Tellier's ephemeral art exhibition

Ephemeral art is an art which became really famous since the twentieth century. Unlike classical art, ephemeral art is destined to be destroyed, to disappear. Most of the time, the materials which are used are natural. During a few months, I followed several students in Secondary School Charles Tellier and they did an exhibition about ephemeral art.

Thereby, I discovered a lot of forms of ephemeral art : Food caving, Land art, Graffiti, sand sculpting, makeup, ice sculpture, bodypainting, stone balancing, sand art ...

The most interesting presentation in my opinion was the presentation about sand art by a student named Elise. She did an incredible device to present us her type of ephemeral art. It seemed like a game, she filled a container of sand et she turned it in order to talk about Lorène Bihorel, an artist who made sand art. Sand art is a type of art which is consist to do some artwork with sand. A wind blow and everything is destroyed.

The second exhibition which impressed me was the exhibition of the stone balancing by a student named Nohan. He animated his presentation and made a masterpiece with stones to show us the concept of stone balancing, an art with rocks.

Tellier's ephemeral art exhibition was really rewarding ! All this to invite you to do some art if you want it. Moreover, ephemeral art is a form of art really accessible at all. Banksy reminded it to us ! He is an anonymous artist and makes graffiti on walls without a lot of equipment or technique.

To conclude, I invite you to admire ephemeral art as much as possible because this is a beautiful form of art and according to me, ephemeral art is attractive and unique because of the fact that one day the artwork will disappear.
